Understanding the Demographic of Snowbirds

The term snowbird refers to humans (and not the avian variety) – primarily retirees – who are committed to making the long journey south to avoid the freezing temperatures and snow at home. Another term for snowbirds is 'winter visitors.' They temporarily leave their residence behind in Chicago and leave for the Sun Belt states down south in Florida.

Some individuals are snowbirds by occupation who look to boost their income by moving to the beachside so they can find employment in the booming hospitality industry.

But it's not just retirees in the twilight years of their life who prefer to live the life of a nomad. The rising popularity of telecommuting now allows younger people to follow the same trend and spend a few weeks at beach resorts in Florida to get away from the harsh winter.

A large number of snowbirds are business owners who own virtual businesses that provide them with the flexibility of chasing the sun, if they choose to do so.

Why it's Nice to Bring Along Your Car for the Ride

It's always convenient to be able to bring your own car so that you can drive around easily. Yes, it's just as easy to hire car rental services – and you also have Uber and Lyft – but that can easily rack up your cost of living. Also, not having access to your own car may limit your vacation options.

Of course, you can drive your car to your destination, but the logistics of the long drive can be challenging. While it's a much cheaper option, it's also worth considering the extra mileage you will rack up on your car. Plus, there's always the added risk of wear and tear and the possibility of a breakdown. Imagine being stranded in the middle of nowhere with a blown tire or, worse, a blown transmission.

Besides, you'll probably have to switch to winter tires during the long drive to Florida. Upon reaching Florida, you'll have to then switch to all-season tires for the southern climate. Winter tires don't handle that well in warm weather. The expenses just keep piling up, don't they?

Driving Long Distances Can be Very Taxing

Even if you don't mind the long mileage on your car, you still have to contend that traveling long distances can be very fatiguing for the driver and passengers. You also have to abide by safety guidelines that require you to stop every few hours, which means having to plan overnight stops. For example, snowbirds from Chicago to Florida by car means several thousand miles. That's a lot of wear and tear – both on you and your car.

You can save up on the cost of renting a room and allocate that to car transport services and a quick flight from Chicago to Florida.

Snowbird Car Shipping is a Convenient Option

This is why many snowbirds opt for snowbird car shipping. It's an extra expense, but one that's justifiable given that they save on those overnight stops, potential car breakdowns along the way, and having an all-around safer trip. These services are beneficial for luxury cars and convenient for passengers on motorcycles.

It's Important to Plan in Advance

Depending on the season and time of year, it may be difficult to book services if you don't plan ahead. Most vehicle transport services probably can't accept car space reservations in advance, no matter how experienced they are.

The best way to get a good quote and reliable services is to book your snowbird car transportation services at least 7 to 10 days in advance of your trip.
